BALLADE OF HEART'S DESIRE.

BY THOMAS WOOD STEVENS.

With fame upon the bugles blown
And waves of lances on the plain,
Men harvest where the fields are sown
With death, and tears are like the rain;
By pomp and craft and high disdain
They build and pass, to sleep with Tyre,
Who spend their souls to seek—in vain—
The glory of the King's Desire.

And men there are who stone on stone
Uprear unto the lord of gain
High temples that they call their own
While Fortune smiles before her fane;
Who tempt the seas and learn to reign
Above the spirit of the fire,
And driving still, may still attain
The worship of the World's Desire.

And some who hold for fleet and throne
No homage—and no homage feign,
Who kneel before one shrine alone,
Who know one love, and one love's pain;
For them the winter in the lane
Chills not the spring song of the lyre;
For them one law, one dream, one chain—
The guerdon of the Heart's Desire.

ENVOI.

Sweet, when the tyrants all are slain,
The temples dark with Fortune's ire,
Still in thine eyes let me regain
The glory of the Heart's Desire.

The Criterion.

THE MAN WHO GOT OVER IT.

THE elder of the two men was still young, but something had crossed his face as a fire crosses a forest, sweeping out the lines and looks that had been. The younger was bright, buoyant, self-satisfied, in love with himself and the world.

The elder had a newspaper in his hand, and he carelessly rolled and unrolled it with an intentness that might have been given to the calculation of eclipses or to the evolving of new systems of philosophy. The younger leaned lazily back in his chair with his hands clasped behind his head.

"It was good of you, Howard, to hunt me up as soon as you came back to the city," the elder said, for the third time. "I have missed you—I have needed the old companionship—I—somehow, I have seemed to be rather—rather alone of late years."

There was a hesitation in his speech that the other found very curious.

"You've been sticking to the office too closely, Morrison," he said, kindly. "Of course, ambition and building one's self up, and hard work, and all that are all right, but you've overdone the thing. It's taking a good deal out of you."

A wintry smile flickered around the lips of the elder man as he unfolded the paper and looked at it critically and then carefully rolled it again.

"Ambition?" he said. "Yes—I used to be ambitious, didn't I?—and rather talented, too, people thought."

"I hope you haven't thrown it all away," cried Howard, with a shocked face.

"Thrown it away! Oh, no! Some men would have done that. But I had a great deal of self-control. I remembered, afterward, that I had been ambitious, with certain objects in view, and so I put myself at the old tasks and have gone plodding, plodding at them with set teeth ever since. I am a plodder now, where I used to run with my soul on fire."

"What in the world has happened to you, old man?" asked the younger, with troubled eyes on the face the fire had swept.

The elder rolled the paper into a tighter roll, and held it in both hands, as though it were his self-control and it might escape from him at any moment.

"I am glad you came to me as soon as you reached town," he said again, always with that curious hesitation in his manner. "I have thought of you many times—and have wished to warn you—you are so very young. Howard—fully three years younger than I—and I know that I ought to warn you—against women!"

The younger, who had bent forward, leaned back again, and from this time on he did not take his eyes from his companion's face.

"Against women," he repeated, mechanically, still holding tight to his self-control. "For you are young, with a sensitiveness and delicacy of spirit which I often noticed when we were boys together. If such an experience—came to you—why it might wreck your life. You might never recover, I doubt if you would even live through it. I have thought of that often. As for me, I am not sensitive nor delicate; and you see I have lived. Not only that, but I have entirely recovered. You could scarcely believe that I can even laugh now when I think of it."

He laughed then to prove it, and at the sound of that laugh the face of the other man grew white.

"Oh! yes, it is all over long ago," he added. "I thanked heaven many times that I was made of coarse fiber, and could triumph over such experiences. But as for you, my boy, don't ever try it. Keep away from them—from women. They will not wait to see if you are the kind that—that lives through it. They will break you heart as a child breaks a doll—to see what is inside—and though your heart beats afterward, the quickness is gone from your spirit and the fire from your brain. That is, it would be from yours. You can see for yourself that I have entirely recovered—entirely."

He waited until he had unrolled the paper and looked at it on all sides, and swiftly rolled it again, before he went on.

"It was three years ago, just after you left town, that I first met—her. I will not tell you her name—you would not know her—but she was young—I was young then, too—and she was so beautiful that all men were attracted to her.

"Do you smile to think that I was attracted, too? True—I had not lived the life most men live. I was a student, and had lived among books and dreams. She was the embodiment of all that was pure and lovely in literature and fancy. I had worshiped her afar off until she called me to her. Howard, she sent the others away and called me, at a queen calls a courtier, and I went."

The paper was growing ragged at the edges. He held it up a moment and looked at it, then clasped his fingers around it till they were white from the pressure, and went on:

"For weeks I saw her every day. I found that I could say brilliant things to amuse her—I, the recluse, the silent. Other men, wealthier, well-known, socially, stood off and were amazed, but I cared nothing for them. Through all the ages, through all the impossibilities of time and space, our two souls had been coming together. Missing her, I would have gone on, a solitary student, to my journey's end. I shuddered, sometimes, to think what my life would have been if I had not gone to the house where I met her first.

"Missing me, she would have laughed and jested with the crowd of suitors, until she wearied of them, and they fell away, one by one, and left her still heartwhole and alone.

"My life was filled with such dreams as these, which seemed so true, so natural that I felt it necessary to speak to Elinor, for she must see as clearly as I."

The flood was carrying him on—he resumed hurriedly, with his eyes on the paper:

"One evening I went to her home. Elinor was alone, with a shadow on her face, and something took possession of me, and I—I spoke. I see you are disturbed for me. You need not be troubled—it was all over, long ago. I have lived through it. I can laugh now, when I think of it—ha, ha, ha!

"She laughed, too, at the time, and said it was the strangest thing that a girl could never be friends with a man but that he spoiled it by wanting to marry her. She leaned back in her cushioned chair—there was something made of silk and lace behind her head, and—and she looked so fair and dainty and gentle—but she was laughing; and she told me that she liked to have me near her for several reasons.

"In the first place, I was tall, and she liked tall men. Then I could talk to her about books, and that enabled her to talk about them, too, without being at the trouble of reading them herself. Then, I was so deliciously serious, and that refreshed her—and above all, she knew she was perfectly safe with me, for no one would ever be insane enough to dream of our marrying.

"She laughed a great deal, yet she was vexed that I had spoken and spoiled it all. She had broken her doll, and, finding nothing but heart's blood inside it, she threw it away. But men were all alike, she said; they all took themselves so seriously.

"And then I laughed also, and went out into the night. A little while after she left London and went abroad; and I—I sat here at my desk and lived.

"Yes, I am quite recovered, fortunately. With some men it might have been a very serious thing. There are men, you know, who put so much of life into a thing that what is left behind isn't worth considering. It would be so with you, Howard. I have thought of you many times, for I knew—what might come—and I wanted to warn you. When you are pouring out your soul they are tolerating you because—because you are tall. It would ruin your life, my boy. Don't let them do it."

"Wait a moment," said the pale-faced younger man, with his hand on the other's arm. "Never mind—I would not have heeded it no man would—but your warning comes too late. I was married last week. I am on my wedding tour. I thought you knew."

The elder paused, with the paper held out in both motionless hands, and stared at him vacantly.

"Married!" he whispered. "And to—whom?"

"To Miss Elinor Vancour."

The paper dropped to the floor with a crash, and in the pause that followed Howard heard his watch tick. Then the man who had outlived the tragedy of his life arose and heard himself saying, formally, a long way off:

"Allow me to congratulate you."—Illustrated Bits.

Imitated Papa.

A little girl, before going out to a tea party, was coached in conduct by a fond mamma. "You may take cake twice if it is offered to you, but if you are asked a third time you must say, with all possible politeness, 'No, thank you!'" On her return home she gave assurance she had remembered and followed the maternal instructions; "but," she added, "the servant brought the cake to me a fourth time."

"And what did you say then?" inquired mamma. "Oh," was the startling rejoinder, "then I thought of what papa does sometimes, and I said: 'Take it away and don't bother.'"

MONEY-LENDING NATIONS.

Foreign Investments of Large Proportions From Many Lands.

A German authority estimates the foreign investments of Belgium, a country having 6,000,000 inhabitants and about one-quarter as large an area as Ohio, at no less than $1,500,000,000. In proportion to the numerical strength of the Belgians and their natural resources, these figures make the $6,000,000,000, or thereabout, which represents French capital put into investments outside of France look small, and they compare well with the largest current estimates of Great Britain's investments beyond the narrow limits of the British Isles.

Authorities differ widely concerning the amount of British money put into other countries, some being as low as $6,000,000,000, not counting British possessions, like India and British colonies. To include these favorite fields for British enterprise might double the figures given. But it is not many years since the London Stock Exchange calculated the probable total of the foreign investments of the British people at more than $17,000,000,000. It does not seem posible that any great decrease can have taken place since 1896.

Germany is believed to have half as much money invested abroad as France, or twice as much as Belgium, but German wealth and German enterprise are alike fast gaining ground, and these corporations will soon be radically changed. Russia is the great debtor nation of Europe, and in that country billions of dollars of French, Belgian and German money has found employment, at greater or less risk, and with widely varying returns.—Boston Transcript.

WISE WORDS.

Love is the secret of learning.

Prayer gives wings to our work.

Faultless men are likely to be forceless.

Workers for God must be waiters on God.

No true soul is content to continue in doubt.

There is no following without forsaking.

The uninfluential man often has the most influence.

Songs of triumph are often for the conquered and the slain.

Didn't Want a Lawyer.

"I began to practice law in Dakota in Territorial days," said the lawyer from Chicago. "Our judges were sent to us, and some of them didn't know any more about law than they did about the political beliefs of the mound builders. One of them I'll call him Jones was so appallingly ignorant that it was a great relief when, on the admission of North Dakota to the Union, he left the bench and began to practice law. His successor was a man wholly without a sense of humor, and the only good thing he ever said in his life was wholly accidental. A man was brought to trial charged with selling powder to the Indians. The judge asked him if he had a lawyer to defend him.

"'No,' said the man, 'I don't want a lawyer.'

"'Well,' said his honor, looking about the rooms till his eyes rested on his predecessor, 'I'll appoint Judge Jones to defend him.'" Washington Post.

The Ingenuous Mind.

Mr. Roth, undertaker, had been summoned to the home of a wealthy aristocrat.

Upon surveying the remains of the deceased, he discovered that the man wore a wig, and that, as he now lay in a reclining position, the wig fell back and exposed the bald pate.

"Madam," said the undertaker obsequiously to the sorrowing widow, "I perceive that your late husband wore a wig during his natural life. I do not suppose you wish this generally known, so if you will kindly favor me with a small pot of glue I will arrange the wig so that it will be unnoticed."

The widow had no glue, but sent out for some immediately.

A short time afterward she approached the undertaker and proffered a small bottle of glue.

"Oh, never mind now," said Mr. Roth, consolingly. "I—er—I found a tack." —Lippincott's Magazine.

A Threatened Removal.

Colonel William Seveley, of Muskogee, Indian Territory, was thoughtfully regarding himself in a looking glass that strangely enough was within his vision, when that vision was not obscured by a man in a white jacket. "In some manner," said Colonel Seveley, "I overdrew my account at one of the banks in my flourishing town. Next day I happened into the bank. 'Mr. Seveley,' said the cashier, 'you have an overdraft.'

"'All right,' I replied. Next day I happened in the bank again, and was reminded of that overdraft, and the same thing happened on the following day.

"Then I stopped that species of annoyance. 'Now, look here,' I said, 'if you don't stop pestering me about that overdraft I'll move it to another bank.'"—Washington Post.

Oxford Ruling Largely.

Oxford has already a large outlook on the outer world. One of her sons rules over South Africa; another is Viceroy of India; many others are filling national posts of almost equal importance abroad as well as at home. But a scheme which opens possibility for leading spirits of the Anglo-Saxon world to learn their lessons at her feet is, even for her, a wonderful widening of opportunity.—Journal of the Royal Colonial Institute.

RAISING DRUG PLANTS

By GEORGE E. WALSH.

THE United States raises a good many of its medicinal plants, but it is so addicted to the drug habit that it pays an annual bill of some $16,000,000 to other countries for importations. If these drugs must be used, it is only natural to ask if the patient cannot save some of the money by encouraging the home industry. A good many of the drug plants are products of the tropics, and cannot be raised here; but expert authorities inform us that some four or five million dollars' worth of the others could readily be produced in the back yards of our suburban homes.

There has been a steadily increasing shortage in the common golden seal, or Hydrastis canadensis. At one time golden seal was so abundant in the East that it was torn up and burnt by farmers to keep it from overrunning their fields. In the Ohio valley it was considered a pest. But to-day it is worth about seventy-five cents a pound wholesale in the market, and it is eagerly hunted for by drug plant collectors. There are scarcely 150,000 pounds collected annually in this country, and the actual demand is several times this amount.

Golden seal will grow easily on rich, loose garden soil. The soil should be made to imitate that of the woods or forest as nearly as possible. The plants are put in rows six inches from each other, with a foot between each row. It takes about three years from planting before harvesting, and after that an annual supply of roots should be had. In two seasons the original plants should increase four times by dividing the rhizomes, which can be cut up in the fall. After the second year the increase should be much faster, for the rhizomes can be cut into small pieces, and each one bearing a bud will form a new plant. The original plants can either be obtained from the woods or from nurseries. In either case they should be planted in late summer, and carefully protected the first winter.

The cultivation of seneca root, or snakeroot (Polygala senega), has also been undertaken in this country. Like golden seal it was at one time very abundant in this country, and it was gathered by collectors of drug plants in the South. The annual shortage has kept the price for it soaring. Cascara sagrada, Rhamnus parshiana, and the coneflower, or Echinacea angustifolia, are also running short in this country, and their cultivation could be undertaken with a sure knowledge that prices would be maintained for years to come. Plantations of these drug plants should yield a good income after the second year, and if the propagation increased by cuttings, the supply should be satisfactory.

A curious fact in regard to the drug trade is that we are to-day importing in considerable quantities ordinary medicinal plants which are found growing wild in this country, and are largely neglected. In some cases these wild plants are destroyed by farmers as noxious weeds, and their very presence on the farm is an eyesore to them. In this class of despised drug plants we have the common dandelion, burdock, couch grass and curly dock. The poor Italians of our towns and cities are apparently the only ones to appreciate the value of these common medicinal plants. In the spring and summer of the year they go forth to dig the roots of the dandelion and dock in gardens, lanes and by the roadsides. In speaking to one of these Italian collectors, the writer ascertained that he made nearly a hundred dollars a year this way. Only a small fraction of his time was given to collecting.

Fair prices are quoted in the drug trade for dock and dandelion roots, and the cultivated sorts are so much superior to the wild that there is money in them. All that the farmer or householder needs to do is to start a rich piece of damp ground with the roots of the dandelion or burdock, and this by transplanting cuttings each year a large supply could be raised. The plants take possession of the soil, but the small ones should be thinned out to give the better growths more room. To cultivate dandelions, burdock and couch grass seems like an absurdity to some, but we have it upon the authority of the Department of Agriculture that many tons of these roots are imported annually into this country for the drug trade.

Experiments have been made to introduce the camphor and cork trees in the Southern States, and some little success has been attained, but it would seem much more to the point if farmers would attempt the cultivation of wild native plants that we now have to import to meet the ordinary drug trade demand. There is a common sage, which we raise in such small quantities that we have to depend upon Italy for our needs. The prices for sage are small, and this fact has discouraged many from undertaking to raise it. But the plant is easily cultivated, requiring practically no great attention, and its annual crop of leaves is large. Five or ten acres devoted to sage growing yields excellent returns on the money and labor invested. It will grow in soil that is not very rich, and once the plantation is started, it continues to yield an income for the simple work of harvesting it. To make it profitable it should be raised on a fairly liberal scale—not less than five or ten acres. In the South in particular it can be raised at little cost. It can be started from seed, and then increased rapidly by cuttings, so that within two or three years a plantation should be in full growth. The leaves are simply stripped from the bushes and dried out of doors on wooden racks, after which they are baled for market.

Belladona, henbane and stramonium grow in this country under cultivation, so that good crops can be harvested, and they all occur here as wild plants or weeds. We import quantities of all three from middle and southern Europe, and pay a good price for them. All of these are susceptible to culture in small gardens, their roots growing rapidly, and their leaves furnishing an abundance of medicinal material for drug purposes. Stramonium is an annual, and must be planted from seed each year, but belladona and henbane are biennials, and can be increased by root division. The leaves are collected and dried in warm, airy places for market.

Prices for these drugs are moderately good, and an acre of land devoted to their culture should yield fair profits. The labor of cultivating is small, the chief item of expense being harvesting and drying of the leaves. In the case of belladona the roots are also collected and sold for medicinal purposes. The work is all light, interesting and profitable for man or woman.

While caraway, anise, and coriander seeds are not usually classed among drugs in the eyes of the average person, they are thus classified by dealers. They are imported in large quantities from other countries. The value of imported anise-seed oil alone is nearly $100,000. All three of these plants can be successfully raised in the average well-drained garden. The seeds are gathered just before they are ripened, and when dried they have a steady market at nearly all seasons of the year. Unlike many garden products, they are not subject to violent fluctuations in price, nor are they perishable goods if held for some time, or shipped to a distant market.

We import nearly $3,000,000 worth of crude opium for smoking purposes or in the form of alkaloids derived from the opium poppy. In many parts of the South the true opium poppy grows successfully, and the products are of the highest commercial value.

There is needed a well-drained, rich soil for the opium poppy, and the small seeds are drilled or sown into rows. There is more skill required for this plant than most of the others mentioned. When the capsules appear on the plant they are gently scraped or scored with a knife, and through this slight incision the milk of the plant oozes. This quickly congulates, hardens, and turns black. It is collected then for medicinal purposes, and refined by various processes. The incision on the capsule is not deep enough to injure the maturing of the seeds, which later are shaken out, and the oil is expressed from them. Southern California, Texas, Florida, and other Southern States appear adapted to the culture of the opium poppy for commercial purposes.

We import some 40,000 pounds of thyme oil, which is made from the ordinary thyme of our old New England gardens, while great quantities of the leaves are used for culinary purposes. The commercial growing of thyme on a small scale should prove a profitable industry, especially as a side issue in gardening or farming where land is cheap and plentiful.

Lavender oil is of medicinal value, and lavender seeds and leaves of great toilet value. Our total importations of this oil and leaves amount in value to over $100,000. The lavender of commerce is raised in this country for private uses, and it should find a place in the ordinary garden of drugs that one starts for profit. Its sweet odor should add materially to the pleasure of cultivating the plants.

Chamomile flowers, senna leaves, and the leaves and flowers of saffron and safflower are imported for the drug trade to a total valuation of about $170,000. They are all plants that thrive in this country, and in the early New England days, when drug stores were scarce, they were found in nearly every herb or medicinal plant garden. They are found growing wild in some parts of this country, especially in the neighborhood of old gardens, where they were probably at one time cultivated.

The roots of sarsaparilla grow wild in the Carolinas, and they have been cultivated to some extent in other parts of the country, while orris, gentian, and ginger roots have been experimented with in the warm Southern States.—Scientific American.

A Profitable Flower Bed.

Two hundred and twenty-one dollars and fifty cents' worth of violets were raised and sold by a young girl who employed her leisure time from house hold duties in flower growing. Her violet patch measured 20x25 feet the first season, and the violets were sold to a near-by florist at fifty cents a hundred blossoms, netting a profit of $92.50. The second season, having transplanted more violet plants in about ten feet more of ground, $129 was realized in the sales.—How to Make Money.

The Biggest Apple.

Residents of Phonia, Col., claim that the largest apple in the world was raised in that district this year. It is of the Wolf River variety and weighs thirty-one and a quarter ounces. Fine large strawberries were picked in the third week in October.

Magic in Art.

There is a magic in the word that makes men, even when they are so cross and ignorant that they don't know the meaning of it, profess a love for art.—Chicago Record-Herald.

A MAN-EATING HORSE.

Story of a Beautiful Stallion That Had Killed Two Men.

A fearful beast is a bad horse. One really has more chance against a tiger. Geronimo stood seventeen hands high and weighed over 1600 pounds. When he reared on his hind legs and came for you screaming, his teeth snapping like bear traps, his black mane flying, a man seemed a tiny antagonist indeed. One blow from those front hoofs and your troubles were over. Once down he'd trample, bite and kick you until your own mother would hesitate to claim the pile of rags and jelly he left. He had served two men so already; nothing but his matchless beauty saved his life.

Nowhere could one find a better example of the satanic than when he tore around his corral in a tantrum, as fine and graceful as a black panther. His mane stood on end; his eyes and nostrils were of a color; the muscles looked to be bursting through the silken gloom of his coat. His swiftness was something incredible. He caught and horribly killed Jim Baxter's hound before it could get out of the corral—and a bear hound is a pretty agile animal.

We fed and watered Geronimo with pitchfork, and in terror then, for his slyness and cunning were on a par with his other pleasant peculiarities. One of the poor devils he killed entered the stable all unsuspecting. Geronimo had broken his chains and stood close against the wall of his stall in the darkness, waiting. The man came within reach. Suddenly a black mass of flesh flashed in the air above him, coming down with all four hoofs and—and that's enough of that story.—Henry Wallace Phillips, in McClure's.

Strange Court-Martial.

After a two-days' court-martial at Devonport, England, Color Sergeant Instructor of Musketry Walter Jefferies of the Second Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, was acquitted on Saturday of a strange charge. This was that he made a false accusation against Lieutenant Lynch in a report, which contained the following:

"Lieutenant Lynch commenced talking about Lieutenant Hope's course. He said, 'I have seen the Colonel, and he told me that Lieutenant Hope has to get through this time by some means or other,' and also said that it did not matter if his scores had to be altered, as it meant a lot to that officer if he failed," and further, "Lieutenant Hope also done practices 4, 5 and 6 on the same day, and the scores actually obtained were 5, 5, 16 points, and I, under the influence of Lieutenant Lynch, the previous night altered the points of those practices to 17, 18, 16, which is now shown on the musketry transfer return and on the register of Lieutenant Hope."

Lieutenant Hope had previously completed one course, and failed to get his qualifying points to enable him to obtain promotion into a line regiment.—London Mail.

Largest Auto in the World.

The largest automobile ever built is a harvester and "auto" combined, and is used in Southern California. It is equal to sixty horses, and goes at the rate of three and a half miles an hour, mowing a swath thirty-six feet wide, cutting up the grain in finished shape, threshing, etc.

The machine is sixty feet long and thirty feet wide. The motive power is furnished by oil. It is such an expensive "harvest hand" that one farmer can not, of course, own it alone, but it is the property of a company, and goes from one farm to another. Eight men are required to run it. As the machine starts off the grain begins falling in sacks on the opposite side from where it is cut, and the straw drops into a cart behind.

Three machines sent to Russia for work on the steppes were delayed in China and captured by the "Boxers." There they remained for two years, but they are now in Russia, and considered an American wonder.

It Could Not Be.

Mr. W. W. Keen, the Philadelphia surgeon, has a number of scrapbooks filled with anecdotes about physicians. These anecdotes are odd, from the fact that they all throw upon physicians a most unflattering light. To illustrate their character, Dr. Keen quoted one of them recently.

"A physician was driving through the street," he said. "A friend stopped him.

"'Doctor,' said the friend anxiously, 'have you heard that horrible story about Williamson?'

"'No,' said the doctor. 'What story is that?'

"'A story to the effect that he was buried alive.'

"'Buried alive?' said the doctor. 'Impossible. He was one of my patients.'"—Collier's Weekly.

Measuring Space.

James Whitcomb Riley, who occasionally visits country schools in the Hoosier State, once gave a brief address on the subject of the stars. At the conclusion of his interesting talk, he said:

"Can any of you boys tell me what space is?"

The bright-faced young son of a country editor promptly raised his hand.

"Well, my lad," said the poet, "what do you think space is?"

"Twenty-five cents an agate line for display matter, sir," he piped out.—Saturday Evening Post.

Her Thoroughness.

"Now, there was my aunt Philenda Pine," ruminatingly remarked the Old Codger. "She was such a careful, painstaking woman, with a nice little knot of hair like a horse-chestnut on the back of her head, that when little Oscar had the measles she counted 'em."—Puck.

Niedringhaus, on Friday's ballot of the joint session of the legislature to select a United States senator. The ballot, which was the 43d, resulted as follows: Niedringhaus, 51; Cockrell, 71; Kerens, 15; McKinley, 4; Bartholdt, 5; Warner, 3; Dyer, 1; Lyons, 1; Walmsley, 1.

Floods Threaten in Kentucky.

Mount Sterling, Ky., March 11.—Over 1¼ inches of rain has fallen in eastern Kentucky mountains in the past 48 hours and a flood is imminent. The Kentucky, Licking and Red rivers are raging torrents, the Licking having a 24-foot rise Friday. Wyoming and Salt Lick on the Licking and Beattyville on the Kentucky side are in danger of being inundated and residents along the lower courses are moving out.

Fatal Lamp Explosion.

Peoria, Ill., March 11.—Samuel Bolt, the 17-year-old son of Charles Bolt, was seriously and perhaps fatally injured by the explosion of a carbide lamp in the Methodist church at Brimfield. Bolt was alone in the building when the accident occurred. He was found in an unconscious condition, with his jaw blown away and his face horribly mutilated. He cannot recover.

Croup is quickly relieved and whooping cough will not "run its course" if you use the original Bee's Laxative Honey and Tar. This Cough Syrup is different from all others because it acts on the bowels. You can not cure croup and whooping cough until you rid the system of all congestion, by working off the cold through a copious action of the bowels. Bee's Laxative Honey and Tar does this, and cures all coughs, croup, whooping cough, etc. No opiates. Clark Drug Co.
